

Business Analyst Introduction Letter - Version 1

Dear Client,

I am pleased to introduce myself as the Business Analyst assigned to support your project. My role is to work with you and your stakeholders to understand the current business situation, identify needs and challenges, and translate those needs into clear requirements that can guide the project team.

During the initial business-understanding phase, I will focus on learning how your current processes work, what problems users experience, what outcomes the organization wants to achieve, and what constraints or risks may affect the solution. I may use stakeholder interviews, workshops, process reviews, document analysis, and follow-up questions to build a complete and accurate understanding of the business need.

I will also help organize and document requirements, clarify priorities, identify gaps or conflicting expectations, and confirm that the requirements reflect stakeholder intent. My goal is to maintain clear communication between business and technical participants so that decisions are based on validated information.

I look forward to working collaboratively with your team. As we begin, I will schedule discovery discussions with the appropriate stakeholders and document key findings, assumptions, open questions, and agreed next steps for review.

Sincerely,
Business Analyst
